Science Destroys Rats and Mice.
Many readers of this paper have been greatly annoyed the last month or so with an annual number of rats and mice, or both. Traps have been of no avail in ridding them of these pests. We are glad to tell them that science has discovered a means of driving rats and mice from the house to die. This is Stearns' Electric Rat and Roach Paste. Its sale has been remarkable, and it never fails. If you cannot get the Paste of your dealer, write direct to the Stearns' Electric Paste Co., Tribune Building, Chicago, Ill., and it will be sent to you express prepaid on receipt of price. It is easy to use, and rids the house of rats, mice, cockroaches, etc. Small size, 25c; Hotel size, eight times the quantity, $1.00.

SPEAKERSHIP IS DOUBTFUL CONTEST

Representative Carlos Long returned from the island of Hawaii yesterday wearing a smile. Some folks say that he has been wiring the Big Island for the speakership of the House. Rumor had it this morning that a caucus of Oahu legislators was held in this city last evening to discuss the speakership. Legislators addressed on the subject today, however, thought that rumor had overdone herself and they suggested that if there had been anything in the way of a getting-together on the speakership proposition, it was probably a gathering of Fifth District interests. It is understood that Maui is not pledged in respect to the speakership. Kauai is believed to be supporting Knudsen with all its forces, with the understanding that Kauai's Representatives will transfer their support to Harris if Knudsen's chances do not guarantee success. Hawaii is doubtful. Holstein may be the choice of the Big Island, but there is no definite in the indications. The proposition of dividing honors between the native Hawaiian and the haole elements, in the Senate and the House, is, of course, receiving a great deal of attention, but it does not necessarily follow that this idea will materialize.

Professor James Brice of England, author of "The American Commonwealth," has begun a series of lectures before the Columbia law school. In the first of these lectures he praised the American law schools, saying: "No part of your system of education here in the United States strikes visitors more forcibly than the efficient means provided for the education of lawyers. Your schools are much better than any in England and that is because the Americans realize that there is a science of law."

Miss May Handy, who married Jas. Brown Potter, has been the ideal Southern beauty for twenty years. Hers is a tall, willowy figure, and her hair in later days has been like burnished copper. Her parents have been dead for years and she has lived with her two servants on Franklin street, Richmond—disdaining a chaperon because she stood on a plane so high that she needed none.

The late Postmaster General Payne began lower in the postal service (an errand boy in postoffice of his native town—Shelburne Falls, Mass.—at $1 per week) than any other employee known. Ex-Postmaster General Thos. L. James of New York began as a clerk in the Gotham postoffice and his career had been considered phenomenal.

GENEAU IS FINED $1 BY DE BOLT FOR HARRIS MURDER.

tions were made. It would be a mockery of justice if a fine was imposed which would simply be paid by a subscription.

Judge De Bolt stated that the sole object of punishment was to reform the defendants and deter others from committing like crimes. If the reason for administering punishment failed, then it seemed to the court as if the law itself failed. If there was no reason for punishment there should be no punishment.

"The defendant while on the stand made a very favorable impression on the court," continued the Judge, "and I do not doubt that he also did so on the jury. He was honorable and true. I think that the misfortune which fell on him was largely the result of a train of unfortunate circumstances over which he to a great extent had no control."

The court next went into the dangers of two things, intoxicating liquor and the carrying of firearms. From the use of intoxicants were caused nine-tenths of the crime and misery, sadness and sorrow in this world, and it was to be hoped that Geneau would never again touch liquor. If he had not indulged in liquor he would probably never have been caught in the trail of unfortunate circumstances.

The carrying of firearms was also made the object of censure by the court. No man had any occasion in ordinary life to carry a pistol. Many crimes were committed because of this habit.

"I think," continued Judge De Bolt, "that the jury considering their oath and the evidence could have acquitted this man. I do not, however, criticize the verdict of the jury in the least. This man was charged with a very heinous offense and some of the jurors may have had in mind that he had some knowledge of what was going on, and also a desire to make a warning for others."

"Geneau impressed me as having a manly nature, above the average, and not possessing criminal instincts. He was naturally thrown in with the worst class of people at all places where he went, and environment counts for something, but I judge from his appearance that his desires are to be honorable and honest."

"The grave charge against him alone has been a severe punishment, to be looked upon as a murderer, to be for a long period in jail, to be confined in a murderer's cell charged with a crime for which others who were convicted were hanged within his hearing, if not within his sight, must have called to his mind what might happen to him, and all these things have been punishments. I do not see that there could be any more severe."

"Possessing the nature that he does I am strongly inclined to believe his testimony, that he did not know what was going on on the evening of the 30th of June. I think he spoke the truth, and I am casting no reflections on the jury when I say that I do believe that if he had been tried before me without a jury I would have been obliged to acquit him. I can not impose imprisonment on this man."

"Is it your desire to remain in the navy?" asked the court turning to the prisoner. "Do you look upon the service as your life occupation?"

"Yes, sir," answered Geneau in a voice hoarse from emotion.
"I feel that the jury almost but not quite acquitted this man. The verdict was all but an acquittal. Nothing in the case calls for a substantial punishment. On the verdict I must give him some punishment because the jury found him guilty. Feeling that there is no guilt the fine should be a light one. Have you anything to say why sentence should not be passed on you?"

"Only this—I can say I am sorry
